The Great Divide

In April of 1861 war had begun with the first shots being fired at the battle of Fort Sumter. Each stitch that held the nation together was torn as brother fought brother in a war that was to test the foundation of American beliefs. As panic and turmoil swept the country, calls went out to all communities for men to take arms.

Missouri was greatly conflicted. As each battle was fought, families and friends were divided as they aligned with either the Union or the Confederates. Friend fought against friend, father against son, uncle against nephew. It was a war that ripped the state in two and threatened the stability of a great nation.
